INSIDE BUSINESS

This news is your business

The Mister Sister program, which uses mobile clinics to provide primary healthcare services to both remote and underserved people, has won the World Bank's Public Private Partnership Short Stories Competition. According to a panel of public-private partnership experts, this programme is "a unique PPP arrangement that leverages both governmental and private sector resources to cover the cost of service delivery and has played a vital role in upgrading health infrastructure and the quality of services delivered to rural populations in Namibia." Mister Sister is run by PharmAccess Namibia and is funded by the Heineken Africa Foundation. Photo: Contributed
